Message from the President

2016 will be remembered as a year of partisan gridlock and an acrimonious election. Yet thanks to you and others who are moved by God’s grace in Jesus Christ, Bread for the World and Bread for the World Institute helped achieve substantial progress toward the goal of ending hunger in our own country and around the world.

We are living in a time when a world without hunger is visible in the not-too-distant future. Thanks to you and others, Congress passed important legislation on global food security, and the United States embraced its commitment to universal goals for ending extreme hunger and poverty by 2030 — leaving no one behind, regardless of where they live. And, as a collective Christian voice, we helped to protect vital international and domestic anti-hunger programs from potentially damaging cuts.

Attempts to cut programs that fight poverty and hunger in the United States will undoubtedly continue and even intensify in 2017. But it is a daily inspiration to me that so many people are willing to speak up for programs that help people move out of poverty and feed their families. I am convinced that ending hunger is one issue that can bring our divided nation together. Thank you for helping to make Bread for the World effective in its mission.

David Beckmann
President, Bread for the World and Bread for the World Institute

Message from the Chair of the Board of Directors

Having seen legislative miracles in 2016, my gratitude to Bread for the World members, our faith community, staff, and the board of directors has never been greater. As we march through 2017, the successes we achieved in 2016 give us all cause for hope.

My work on women’s property rights in East Africa over the years has given me a firsthand look at famine and how easily it can happen. I’m heartbroken that the promise of independence in South Sudan has been shattered by renewed conflict. Bread for the World Institute’s 2017 Hunger Report: Fragile Environments, Resilient Communities highlights the fragility of many nations, but the report also identifies opportunities to build resilience that protects people from hunger.

Thank you for your continued prayers, your financial support, and your advocacy with our nation’s decision makers.

Sandra Joireman
Chair of the Board of Directors

Legislative Victories in 2016

Bread for the World’s work in recent years has been focused on the goal of helping to make hunger and poverty a higher U.S. priority by 2017 — toward the long-term goal of ending hunger by 2030. Thanks to the financial support and active involvement of Bread for the World members, important legislative victories were achieved in 2016.

Because of the election season and continuing partisan gridlock, Congress did not pass much legislation in 2016. Thus, the rare bipartisan agreement by Congress to pass two major pieces of legislation for which Bread members had long advocated were major victories for our work together to end hunger.

The Global Food Security Act (GFSA) passed Congress with broad bipartisan support in July. Bread for the World was one of five organizations that led a much larger coalition to help pass this bill. Bread for the World’s members had more than 130 meetings with congressional staff and secured 62 of the bill’s 112 cosponsors.

The bill authorizes $7.6 billion for agriculture, nutrition, and cash for food assistance over two years. It mandates policies long advanced by Bread for the World, including strong emphasis on nutrition in the first 1,000 days of life. Congress instructed the Obama administration to develop a forward-looking U.S. Food Security Strategy. The GFSA also mandates that relevant congressional committees review the Trump administration’s progress against this strategy in each of the next two years.

The Foreign Aid Transparency and Accountability Act also became law in 2016. Since 2009, Bread for the World members have worked to make U.S. foreign assistance more effective. The bill mandates the continuation of www.foreignassistance.gov, which posts detailed information about all civilian assistance programs. Our work for foreign aid reform has helped build bipartisan support for foreign assistance.

The implementation of these two pieces of legislation will help the United States fulfill its responsibility to support the 2030 Agenda on Sustainable Development, which includes ending hunger by 2030. The nations of the world — including the United States — adopted these goals following Pope Francis’s visit to the United Nations in the fall of 2015.

Bread for the World’s Offering of Letters: Survive and Thrive helped secure $125 million for global maternal and child nutrition programs. The goal was to increase funding for global nutrition from $125 million to $230 million. Unfortunately we suffered a big setback early in the year when the president’s budget proposed to decrease international nutrition funding to less than $125 million. Bread for the World arranged meetings with nearly every member of the Senate and House State and Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittees. Our letters, emails, phone calls, and meetings helped to convince appropriators to maintain level funding.

Funding for Poverty-Focused Programs. Thanks, in part, to Bread for the World’s advocacy, Congress passed a continuing resolution to fund the government through the end of April 2017. Congress did not cut low-income programs, and it did increase international affairs spending by 8 percent, expanding both security and humanitarian assistance in the Middle East.

In 2016, Bread for the World members helped pass legislation that will support farmers in Africa and elsewhere as they grow more food for their families and communities.
Bread for the World Institute

When the United States signed on to the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, it committed to ending hunger in this country as well as around the world. In February 2016, Bread for the World Institute hosted a group of 50 organizations for a briefing about reaching the goals in the United States. From that consultation, the Institute began convening a monthly meeting of 20 organizations to focus attention on ending hunger in the United States by 2030. The working group has built relationships with staff in key federal agencies to promote administration action on the goals and to assist in broadening their work.

Each year, Bread for the World Institute produces a major report of data, analysis, and policy recommendations on an important aspect of hunger.

The 2016 Hunger Report: The Nourishing Effect: Ending Hunger, Improving Health, Reducing Inequality recommended that healthcare providers use a two-question survey to assess hunger among patients. In 2016, the American Academy of Pediatrics issued a policy statement calling on its members to use the two-question survey to screen for food insecurity. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services initiated a grant program to examine how addressing hunger might affect health and health care costs.

In the fall of 2016, the Institute released its 2017 Hunger Report: Fragile Environments, Resilient Communities. The report’s key findings include:

- Forty percent of the people in the world caught in extreme poverty live in fragile states that are struggling with conflict and climate change. Almost all the international aid these countries now receive is humanitarian assistance, primarily emergency food aid. Strengthening international support for long-term development and peacemaking is essential.

- Within the United States, the number of people living in communities of deep and persistent poverty has increased sharply in recent years. Ending hunger in the United States will require more effort in these communities.

Other Accomplishments in 2016

President Obama’s Advisory Council on Poverty and Opportunity. In the fall of 2016, President Obama appointed an advisory council to identify and help spur actions by his administration in its final months to reduce poverty and promote economic opportunity. Bread for the World's President David Beckmann chaired the Council’s working group on economic opportunity, and two of Bread for the World Institute’s analysts, Cynthia Woodside and Marlysa Gamblin, also worked with the Council. The administration partially implemented 11 of the Council’s 14 recommendations.

Lobby Day 2016. More than 260 Bread for the World members met with 166 congressional offices in Washington, D.C. Bread members who weren’t able to come made phone calls and sent emails to their members of Congress. We also provided intensive advocacy training to 21 Latino pastors.

Seminaries. Dave Miner and Matthew Boulton, Bread for the World board members, developed and taught a graduate course at Christian Theological Seminary in Indianapolis, called “Changing the World 101: Ending Hunger as a Case Study for Systems Change.” Subsequently, with support from the Eleanor Crook Foundation, a consultation of faculty and administrators from 10 seminaries outlined a plan to deepen hunger advocacy programming and training at key seminaries.

Election-related Advocacy

The goal of Bread for the World’s elections work was to help make hunger, poverty, and opportunity a higher U.S. priority by 2017. The hoped-for result was that the incoming president and Congress would put us on track to end hunger by 2030.

Bread for the World provided leadership in two coalitions. Bread for the World President David Beckmann led the Circle of Protection in securing videos on hunger and poverty from the presidential candidates. Eric Mitchell, director of government relations, and Rebecca Middleton, executive director of the Alliance to End Hunger, provided leadership for the Vote to End Hunger. This broader coalition of faith and secular groups raised hunger as an election issue. Vote to End Hunger grew to 180 organizations.

Starting at the outset of the presidential primaries, Bread for the World and our partners secured statements on hunger and poverty from all but one of the presidential candidates. Partly in response to the advocacy of our Vote to End Hunger coalition, both party platforms included thoughtful statements about poverty, foreign aid, immigration, and criminal justice reform.

Bread for the World organized ten new leadership teams and held eight election events. Op-eds appeared in six local newspapers. After Congress adjourned in late summer, Bread for the World members met with 18 candidates for Congress. Ten of these candidates won their elections, and all of these new members of Congress committed themselves to meeting with Bread’s activists again after their election.

An innovative online advertising campaign resulted in 60 million people seeing at least one of our ads and becoming more aware of the importance of hunger as an election issue. Sixteen million people clicked on at least one of Bread’s digital messages. More than 600,000 people signed online petitions to urge more attention to hunger in the elections. This online petition played a critical role in convincing the Trump campaign to produce a signed statement on hunger and poverty.

More than 75,000 voters who had previously expressed concern about hunger turned to Bread to learn the location of their polling place, and our on-the-ground efforts helped 10,000 people get to the polls.

El Camino del Inmigrante.
In August 2016, five Bread for the World staff members along with board member Walter Contreras participated in El Camino del Inmigrante, which was organized by the Christian Community Development Association. Participants walked 150 miles from the Tijuana-San Diego border to a detention center in Los Angeles to express solidarity with undocumented people and to raise the issue of immigration reform. The walk was reported in 46 newspapers, 14 radio stations, and two of the largest Spanish-language television networks.

Bread for the World is a collective Christian voice urging our nation’s decision makers to end hunger at home and abroad. By changing the policies and conditions that allow hunger and poverty to persist, we provide help and opportunity far beyond the communities where we live.

Bread for the World Institute provides policy analysis on hunger and strategies to end it. The Institute educates opinion leaders, policy makers, and the public about hunger in the United States and abroad.

Several individuals, families, and institutions who made generous gifts in 2016 wish their giving to remain anonymous. Space does not permit us to recognize all of our members whose generous financial support strengthens our collective Christian voice on behalf of hungry people. Our heartfelt gratitude goes out to them.

Contributions to Bread for the World are not tax-deductible because its members lobby Congress on behalf of hungry people. Many individuals and families chose to support Bread for the World Institute. Contributions to the Institute are tax-deductible and support research and education, including the publication of the annual Hunger Report and research on maternal and child nutrition and education.

2017 Offering of Letters: Doing Our Part to End Hunger

Bread for the World’s 2017 Offering of Letters urges Congress to invest in programs that will put our nation and the world on track to end hunger by 2030. The FY 2018 federal budget is an opportunity for our nation to invest in programs like WIC, SNAP, tax credits for low-income workers, and international development assistance. These programs help millions of people escape from hunger. For a sample letter and suggestions for involving your church, visit www.bread.org/ol.

Plan now to take part in Lobby Day on June 12, 2018, in Washington, DC.

You can help convince Congress to get our nation and the world on track to end hunger by 2030.
